A word from Bobby

After celebrating the installment of a new water well some Maasai Warriors wanted to give our team a “better” gift. They invited us to hike with them up the sacred Maasai Mountain Sabache. It’s a sacred Maasai place of prayer, a holy burial ground of elders, and it is a great water source during severe droughts.

I heard the invitation, but I declined the offer. The other 2 team members chose to go. I was satisfied sitting right in the lounge drinking my Coca Cola and enjoying the ordinary. As they were leaving, I remember happily telling them to be safe and have a good time. After the passing of an hour or so, I began to regret my decision and wondered what they were seeing. I was very comfortable at the time of the invitation, but as time passed I really wished that I had gone, but it was too late. After about 2 hours the first team member returned with amazing stories and I knew as she spoke that I had made a terrible decision. After about 4 hours, the other team member returned and she was beaming! She was telling of the scenic beauties that she had encountered. The whole time that she was descriptively talking about her beautiful experience, I knew that I had missed out on the “better” because I was lazy, complacent, and comfortable. I will never know the great joys of hiking Mt. Sabache.

How many invitations has God invited me to participate in and I have not answered because of being complacent or comfortable? I learned a big lesson that day, that my human freewill can cause me to miss the “better” and the blessings of God!

Celebration in Lerate!

Last August, we were near Archer Post in Northern Kenya celebrating and dedicating the new Lerate water well. It is over 550 feet deep and will produce an abundance of fresh, clean water in Jesus' name! The village elders were really excited because the well supports the village including a school and an indigenous medical clinic. I have tasted the water out of this well and it tasted like the sweetest water on earth! As we celebrated the great gift of life from God and the friends and partners of Unto the Least of His, we were overwhelmed with joy and peace. A few of the Maasai women were literally passing out as they saw the fresh water coming out of the ground and through the pipes! It meant that drought would be less severe and that the gift of life was being transferred to their families and villages.
